SlowSend: The Deliberate Messaging App

SlowSend is a messaging app with a unique twist: it introduces deliberate delays to messages you send to anyone who isn't a new contact. The app aims to encourage more meaningful digital communication by slowing down the pace at which we exchange messages with established contacts, while fostering quick communication with new ones.

Messages to contacts added within the last week are sent instantly, encouraging users to keep meeting new people and to quickly integrate them into their social circles.

For contacts older than a week, SlowSend imposes a delay on sent messages. Users have the ability to customize how long each message is delayed, be it minutes, hours, or even days.

Potential Features:

Reflective Period: The app introduces a “reflection period” before you can send a message to an older contact, encouraging users to think twice about their words, promoting mindfulness and intention in communication.

“Message Received” Notification: Users receive notifications when their delayed messages are finally sent and then again when read, turning the act of messaging into a more thoughtful and less impulsive action.
